Another application: Asking questions in several channels and marking those, so one remembers where and when the questions have been asked, so he can specifically look for answers. (In case he is seldomly online, or people reply without highlighting.)

Third application: Use it to mark highlights (while disconnected). Often, when one is disconnected for a long time, there have been several highlights in the same channel. It is then difficult with current methods to find all those highlights reliably. Having all highlights in a list of bookmarks would be an elegant and flexible way to solve that issue.
